DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

Claims 1-6, 8-13, and 41 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kagami et al. in view of Brewer et al. and Official Notice.

Kagami et al. disclose or inherently teach the limitations of the claim 1 (see specifically Fig. 2, and Col. 5, lines 6-41); except the reference lacks the specific teaching of the time frame comprising a range of hours, “notifying an interested party” (the reference only teaches giving “advice to modify”; Col. 5, lines 40-41), and adjusting the corresponding time frame for a particular individual item if the estimated sales projection for the particular item does not exceed a minimum criteria.

Brewer et al. teach an inventory control apparatus whereby inventory can monitored over various selected time frames including hourly time frames (See, for example, Col. 3, lines 35-46).

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to modify Kagami et al. to have the time frame comprise a range of hours, in view of Brewer et al., in order to “produce a highly flexible system tailoring reports to a users requirements” (See Brewer et al., Col. 3, lines 44-46).

Further, it would have been an obvious design choice to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to modify Kagami et al. to notify “an interested party”, of the advice to modify the inventory control system in order to provide a manager with the necessary information to act on the advice and hence change the system to improve the system’s future accuracy.

Further, the Examiner takes Official Notice that it is well known in sales to adjust the corresponding time frame for a particular individual item if the estimated sales projection for the particular individual item does not exceed a minimum criteria. For example, in real estate, an owner of a property has to have his house sold within two weeks due to a job transfer. The real estate agent has been selling houses in the neighborhood within one month on average (thus, the sales projection for this individual item is one month). Because the estimated sales projection (one every month) does not exceed the minimum criteria set by the owner of two weeks, the real estate agent has to adjust the corresponding time frame for selling the house to two weeks. Of course, in order to sell the house in two weeks, the agent would probably have to increase the demand for the house by either lowering the price or working harder to find more buyers. Thus, this example describes how it is common in everyday business/sales to adjust the corresponding time frame for a particular individual item if the estimated sales projection for the particular individual item does not exceed a minimum criteria.

Re claims 2-6 and 8-13: The reference lacks the specific teaching of all of the limitations in the claims, however, these added limitations are well known in the art of inventory control and it would have been an obvious design choice at the time of the invention to modify Kagami et al. to include any one of the limitations of claims 2-6 and 8-13 in order to provide certain desired results.

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments filed 6/18/2004 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.

Applicant argues on page 5 of the REMARKS that Brewer also does not teach or suggest the time frame "comprising a range of hours within a particular day", as recited in claim 1. Specifically, applicant states that the time span of Brewer is only a "most recent time period" (i.e., the last hour, the last day, etc.).

However, the Examiner disagrees. Column 3, lines 37-40 of Brewer, specifically states that the time frames "may be any other time span". It does not necessarily have to be in the most recent period, as applicant argues.

Further, with regards to the applicant's argument that a sale season typically spans over weeks or months; the argument is also not fully persuasive in that some "sale seasons" may be less than a week. For example, the sale periods for New Year's Day, Valentine's Day, President's Day, Thanksgiving, or Halloween may be shorter than a week.

Thus, the arguments are not persuasive and the rejections have been maintained.
